ABSTRACT

The Covid 19 pandemic that has hit the world since the end of December 2019 has resulted in various side effects in human life. The impacts of the pandemic include declining family financial income, as well as increasing domestic violence and violence against children and various other effects. Increasing the capacity of women to maintain family resilience can be further enhanced by having a better understanding of marriage laws and child protection laws to increase their capacity to maintain family resilience. Women also need to be empowered again to use the land around their homes by inviting them to use their yards by planting vegetables and fruits that can be used to increase family welfare and family resilience economically so that they can help them maintain family resilience.
